Crescent Theater.

From New Orleans Times.

"Mutt and Jeff," in the parlance of the day, are there with the goods. The play by that name, which opened a week's engagement at the Crescent Theater last night, is not above the average, but the characters themselves are "shrieks." An audience in which standing room was at a premium went into hysterics over the antics of the pair last night. Ed West in the role of A. Mutt has a make-up that out-Mutts the original from the pen of "Bud" Fisher, and with it he is a good comedian. And Jerry Sullivan, a dwarf, who seems to have walked right out of the pictured "Little Jeff," can be described by nothing short of "scream."

When the pair rolled upon the stage shortly after the first act opened last night the gallery gave up a shriek of delight that quickly spread over the entire house and lasted for several minutes. Again and again the gyrations of the little fellow or the simple evolutions of Mutt threw the house into laughter that for minutes drowned the words spoken on the stage.

The production has been carefully staged. The costumes are new and pretty and the scenery is in first-class condition; on the whole there are up to the dollar-and-a-half standard. The chorus from the viewpoint of looks is the best that has appeared at the Crescent this year, and is well drilled.

"Mutt and Jeff" is billed as a musical comedy and musical numbers run through the three acts, but the costumes and fancy chorus drills, with good scenic effects, are the features of these numbers. The plot is of about as much interest as the music. The cast is about the average for shows of the character.

West and Sullivan are remarkably successful in getting the Mutt and Jeff spirit, the real fun of the Fisher cartoons, into their work. They are faithful in make-up and artistically accurate in the Broadway slang they use. The "stunts they pull," to use their own language, are just the crazy sort of thing to be expected of Mutt and Jeff of the pictures.
